Brett Helquist
(Series of Unfortunate events: Water at Café Salmonella)
Brett loved old comics. When he thought of becoming an artist, he thought of drawing comic strips. That's where he was about to get him in an art class run at a local art supply store; that's where he started developing how to paint. After he was dropped and didn't do anything with painting all through middle school and high school. He served a mission in Hong Kong and fell in love with Chinese brush painting. Brett says that some of his biggest inspirations are artists like C. W. Cuyler, Howard Pyle, and Dean Cornwell who illustrated stories like Robin Hood, old cowboy stories, the American West, Treasure Island, King Arthur, and the Three Musketeers. He especially likes the water at Café Salmonella, his black and white drawings take 1 to 2 days to complete and he has spent over long 24 hours to finish. Brett believes the composition is the most important part, he believes it is where all the work is and making sure all is in proportion; getting all the details correct.

Prayer for the New Term

Father,
